EDITORIAL

A recent article written by a jailed sex offender detailed the childhood which this man has come to understand affected his development and led him to molest young girls and women. Two incidents stand out in his memory.

At the age of three, he was severely punished because his aunt thought he was touching his genitals while bathing, when he was actually searching for lost soap. And when he was in high school, a teacher lectured the entire class on the "dirtiness" of the body and the "sin" of sex because someone (never identified) drew a picture of a nude female on the blackboard. The author reported that, when he described these incidents in a prison therapy group, every other sex offender acknowledged similar happenings. They had been made oversensitive to sex through such negative experiences.

Because they recognize the destructive effects of oversensitivity to sex, prison psychiatrists (as well as those on the "outside") strive to desensitize their patients in this area, so that these unfortunates will learn to accept their own—and others'—sexuality without upset. One psychologist remarked that he uses magazines

Some gals seem to need to be admired and are willing to go to any lengths to get attention—especially from a man. And most sensible men admit that such an arrangement is great. These guys know they enjoy seeing beautiful women, and they're happy that they don't have to hunt all over for gals who encourage them to look.

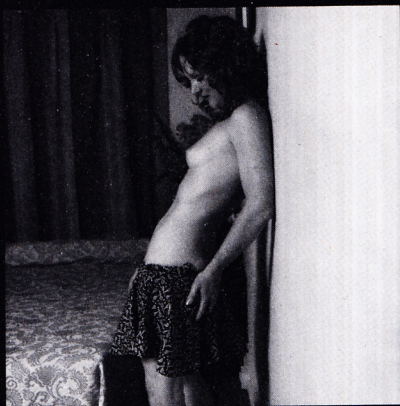

Lots of gals who like to show off can be found on the beach. Pretty girls with lithe figures often spend the entire day lolling around on the sand, convinced that they will find "Mr. Right" just by waiting to be discovered. What's nice about it is that these gals are happy to show off before any man, as long as he expresses appreciation.

Another great place to find gals who want to be seen is at ski resorts. Here they will be wearing tight slacks and fitted sweaters. Like the girls on the beaches, these chicks want to be admired. Even when they know a man is not at all serious in his intentions, they can't resist him if he lets them know he thinks they're pretty.

Colleges attract young women, many of whom are convinced they will get farther in life on their looks than they ever will through the use of their brains. These body-conscious females concentrate on stirring the interest of every man they meet. Who knows which one will hold the key to a future of luxury and excitement?

Many young women get jobs in business so they can find men who are already successful. As a result, smart-looking gals abound in most offices—all doing their best to show just what they have to offer. These gals know that a crowd of admirers can serve to focus all attention on them, often leading to a prize catch.

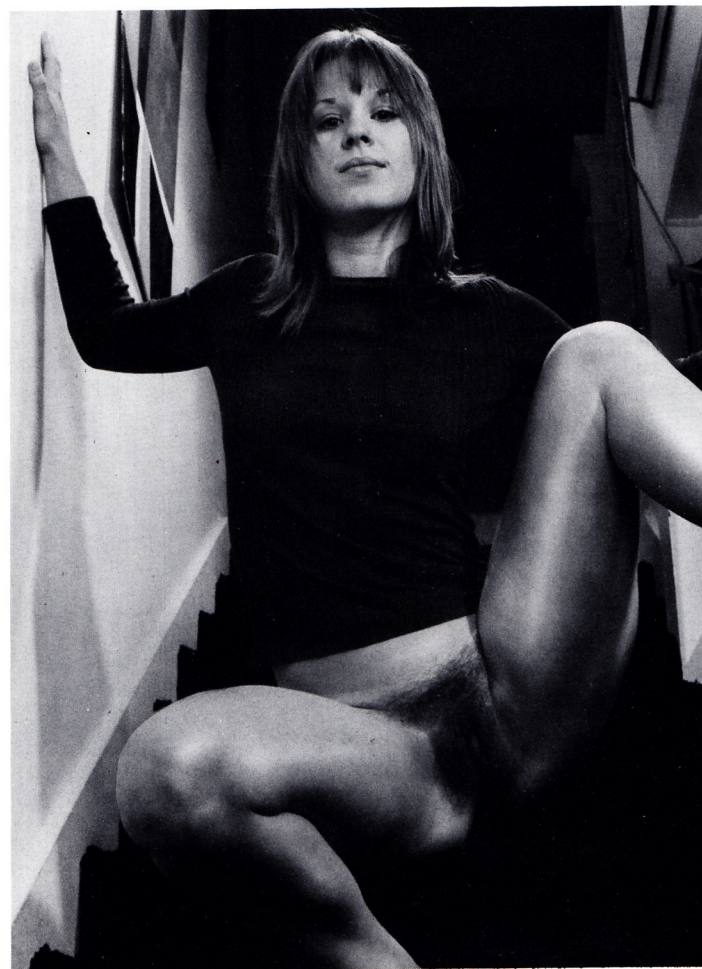

Lots of young females today take ocean cruises to meet interesting people. These tasty dishes parade around on the decks of pleasure craft, vying with each other for the attention of the men who accompany them. It's a cinch that any guy who likes to look at pretty gals will do well as a passenger on a luxury liner.

Some men are convinced that foreign women are more enticing than the home-grown variety. They travel around the world seeking out exotic girls. But, for the average American male, such trips are disappointing. The concept of female beauty is not the same the world over. And, in one country, a man can get shot for ogling a woman!

Because the very culture that teaches American men to enjoy girlwatching also conditions American females to like being observed, we have a good balance right here at home. In fact, the best place for a guy to watch pretty girls go by is in any big city where lovely, long-legged, exciting American gals like to live.

containing photographs of nudes in erotic poses to effect that important step in his treatment of disturbed patients.

Yet, despite evidence as to the value of accepting nudity and human eroticism in print, some well-meaning—but ill-advised—individuals still attempt to ban the distribution of all books and magazines in which the nude is shown. These people, like the sex criminals mentioned above, usually have backgrounds that were sexually repressive; and they are, as a result, oversensitive to sex—both their own and that of others.

However, unlike the molesters and rapists, these people have managed to control themselves in social situations. But their sex fear—and fascination—shows itself in a preoccupation with the need to censor all things sexual, to destroy the “sinful” sexuality they were taught to fear as children. Aware as they are of the struggle they, themselves, go through to control their aberrant desires, they cannot believe that sex can be anything but evil.

Conversely, those of you who buy this magazine and others like it are not influenced by the disciplinary myths of your childhood. You know that the viewing of photographs of the nude human body is not harmful and that, on the contrary, it can provide much pleasure. Yet, unless you are willing to fight hard to maintain the privilege of this enjoyment, those opposed to such “obscenity” will succeed in depriving you of this harmless—and often beneficial—pastime.

The First Amendment of our Constitution is designed to give you the freedom to read and view what you choose. Certainly, you should not permit a minority, fearful of human sexuality, to deprive you of that guarantee. Let your elected representatives know how you feel. Insist that they defend your rights—or you will, by default, permit your “morality” to be controlled by emotionally handicapped, self-appointed censors.
